Sales and performance report: Chinook store

Top tracks and sales volume

The sales data shows clear patterns in what customers buy. Top-selling tracks come mostly from two groups: heavy rock classics and video episodes.

Tracks priced at 0.99 dollar made up most single track sales, led by songs from Jimi Hendrix and Nirvana. High-dollar video tracks priced at 1.99 dollars generated larger single-item totals despite lower unit counts. The store sells individual songs far more often than full albums. Most buyers pick two or three specific songs from an artist rather than the whole catalog.

Geographic sales breakdown

The customer base spans several continents, but spending concentrates heavily in a few countries.

The United States leads all markets with 91 orders and over 523 dollars in sales. Canada follows with 56 orders totaling 303 dollars. France, Brazil, and Germany round out the top five, each generating between 150 and 200 dollars.

Order values stay steady across all regions. The average order sits between 5.30 and 5.80 dollars regardless of country. Customers buy around five tracks per transaction across both large and small markets.

Monthly sales trends

Sales remain steady across the multi-year timeline, averaging roughly 35 to 45 dollars per month.

There are no sharp holiday spikes. Revenue holds a predictable cadence with slight dips in summer months followed by steady recovery in the fall. The absence of steep declines shows strong baseline demand from the registered user base.

Genre distribution by market

Rock dominates every major geographic territory by a wide margin.

In the United States, rock tracks generated more than 150 dollars in revenue, more than double the second-place genre. Latin music took the top spot in Brazil and showed strength in Portugal. Metal held the second position across most central European markets, including Germany and the Czech Republic.

The catalog is heavily dependent on classic rock. Broadening the collection into electronic and pop would help reach younger listeners who do not buy classic rock.
